

Droichead — a quick reference guide

Teaching Council policy on a new model of induction and probation

An Chomhairle Mhúinteoireachta
The Teaching Council

Introduction to Droichead

Droichead is a new model of induction and probation for newly qualified teachers (NQTs). The Council's policy on this new model was developed following a consultation process, which took place in 2013.

Droichead is about a systemic welcome for NQTs, by fellow professionals, into the most important profession in society. It refers to that period of supported professional practice which an NQT will undertake following initial registration.

Satisfactory engagement in Droichead will be attached to every new teacher's registration as a condition, along with completion of the National Induction Workshop Programme. The teacher will be deemed to be probated and awarded full registration when the Council has received evidence that all of the registration conditions have been met by the teacher.

Droichead must be completed within three years of initial registration. There are exceptions to this; please see the Council's Procedures for Induction and Procedures and Criteria for Probation for further information.

Droichead in practice

Professionally-led regulation is the fundamental value underpinning Droichead. This value is manifested by the fact that fully-registered teachers are best placed to support the newly qualified teacher on their journey to full registration. It is also evidenced by the fact that an experienced colleague will confirm to the Teaching Council whether or not the teacher has satisfactorily completed Droichead. Droichead is, therefore, a process which seeks to empower the profession to lead its own process of professional support in a way that ensures the highest of standards, and maintains public confidence in the profession.

Droichead may be facilitated within schools in different ways, depending on their size, structure and particular circumstances. Each school will be asked to ensure that the experience offered to the new teacher is structured, and that support is available.

The Council suggests that the best approach would involve the establishment of Professional Support Teams. The team would typically be comprised of the principal, a mentor and one or more experienced colleagues, although there is considerable flexibility around this and different models will suit different schools. Mentors support the newly qualified teacher during the Droichead process. The principal, and/or the experienced colleague(s), will be asked to confirm to the Council that the teacher has satisfactorily completed the process.

In some circumstances, a single Professional Support Team might be comprised of teachers from a number of schools. In other circumstances, confirmation of satisfactory engagement in Droichead could be made by the school principal or deputy principal, or an experienced colleague nominated by the principal. This means that principals have the choice of being directly involved in the confirmation process or not.

In confirming that a teacher has satisfactorily completed the process, a Droichead form will be completed, confirming that the teacher has:

- completed a required minimum period of professional practice;
- engaged professionally with the school-based induction activities as established by the Teaching Council;
- demonstrated a satisfactory commitment to quality teaching and learning; and,
- demonstrated an ability to practise independently as a qualified, fully registered teacher.

The form will be retained by the newly qualified teacher until he or she has completed the total period of professional practice required. Based on the form submitted, the Teaching Council will determine if the Droichead condition should be removed from the teacher's registration.

Droichead pilot

Schools are welcome to take part in an opt-in Droichead pilot. At present, the pilot is focused on primary and post-primary schools in those counties which normally have the highest concentration of newly qualified teachers. These are listed in Droichead: A Guide for Pilot Schools which is available on the Council's website, www.teachingcouncil.ie. Schools outside of those counties can make a case for inclusion in the pilot, and some have done so already.

Where a school opts to take part in the pilot, it will be invited to participate in a cluster of schools in the same region. Cluster meetings will be arranged at which participating schools will receive training, share their experiences of the pilot, and receive support from the National Induction Programme for Teachers (NIPT) and an inspector will be assigned to that cluster. Ongoing email and phone support will be available from the NIPT and the Inspectorate.

Research will be carried out to evaluate the new model and to gather evidence from the profession to inform the Council's thinking in the further development and roll-out of Droichead. A research bursary will be made available to schools participating in the pilot, to support their role in the research strand.
